‘McCrea’s portrait of Jiang Qing is a masterpiece of characterisation: at once monstrous and pitiable. The Sisters Mao is dazzlingly clever and original.’

ANTONIA SENIOR, THE TIMES

‘A study of political madness ... modifying the old cliché that the personal is political, the message here is a reminder that the political is always personal.’

PHIL BAKER, THE SUNDAY TIMES

‘Manages to combine vast research with lightness of touch and superb insights.’

CAITRIONA LALLY, SUNDAY INDEPENDENT

‘A stirring, perceptive exploration of radical politics ... a sweeping portrait of three women shaped by fanaticism, dysfunctional families, intra-group sexism and politics-as-performance ... This excellent novel, populated by maddening, memorable characters, offers a timeless reminder of extremism’s perils.’

KEVIN CANFIELD, MINNEAPOLIS STAR TRIBUNE

‘It is impeccably researched and he interweaves the personal and the political to great effect.’

LUCY POPESCU, FINANCIAL TIMES

‘A capacious work of social realism ... dazzlingly ambitious yet modestly human.’

LARA FEIGEL, THE GUARDIAN

‘McCrea’s observations are a joy ... this is a novel worth taking time over, for readers anywhere on the political spectrum.’

CHRISTOPHER HARDING, THE TELEGRAPH

‘The writing has an engrossing flow of energy, a vigour and a flair which have the audacity of invention ... Given its immensity and arguments the novel could invite comparison with some of the great Russian writers.’

MARY LELAND, IRISH EXAMINER

‘Ambitious ... McCrea writes insightfully about mother-daughter dynamics, the power of theatre, and women’s roles in revolutionary movements.’

PUBLISHERS WEEKLY

A masterfully woven thriller of political intrigue that spans from China to London; McCrea turns the historical, the political and contemporary into a spinning top of mesmerizing prose.
